Identity, memory and spirituality across image, sound and immersive media

An interdisciplinary practice grounded in visual art.

Thomas Ogun is a Nigerian visual artist whose practice explores identity, spirituality, ancestry and cultural memory. Working through drawing, digital illustration, moving image, sound and augmented reality, he develops visual systems in which repeated forms and symbolic objects carry personal and shared histories.

His self-curated independent exhibition, Identity & Spirituality (2026), brings together eight physical digital illustrations and two augmented reality installations. His wider practice includes film presented at Burgkino in Vienna, cross-border creative direction between Lagos and Cape Town, and the artist-built Aura Manager platform.

Thomas Ogun during Identity & Spirituality, 2026

Memory carried across image, sound and space.

My practice explores how identity is carried through memory, ancestry, spirituality and contemporary African experience. I begin with research, drawing and repeated pattern studies so that objects, histories and personal observations can develop into a visual language.

In The Void of Souls, the cowrie becomes an orange-gold sign within a dark radial field. Survival joins the wooden comb, a sign of personal identity, with the boat and reversed symbol that hold the history of Igbo Landing. Cultural Identity expands this method into a memory archive of manillas, an Ifa chain, a wooden comb, Nok forms, a brass bell and cowries.

Drawing is where research passes through the hand. Curves, spirals, grids and symbolic fragments are tested until a coherent system forms, then translated through colour, digital illustration, moving image, sound and augmented reality. Technology extends the encounter without replacing the physical image. Ultimately, my work invites viewers to reconsider how memory, identity and spirituality continue to shape contemporary African experience.
